Gulbenkian Prize for Humanity

The €1 million Gulbenkian Prize for Humanity helps accelerate proven, impactful climate action that benefits people and the planet.

Winners are selected by an independent jury of internationally recognised experts in climate science and earth systems; climate justice and human rights; innovation and technology; and diplomacy, governance and politics, chaired by Angela Merkel, through a rigorous process including open nominations.

Any individual, organisation or group of individuals/organisations making a significant contribution to tackling climate change for people and the planet can receive the Prize. They can come from anywhere in the globe.

Winners are chosen for their proven achievements and inspirational leadership, as well as their potential for wider transformative impact, and relevance to the most pressing challenges posed by climate change to people and the planet.

The nomination form asks five open text questions to help the Jury assess the nominee against the key criteria.

ABOUT THE PRIZE

JURY

Before starting the nomination form below, please read these instructions:

- Nominations must come from a third party. Self-nominations are not permitted. Please read the Call Conditions and Frequently Asked Questions to understand the criteria and ensure your nomination is eligible.
- There are three categories of nomination forms: For individuals, organisations or groups of individuals/organisations.
- The form must be completed in one session. It is not possible to save the form before submitting. However, to help you prepare offline, you can download copies of the questions for the three categories: Individual; Organisation; Group of Individuals/Organisations.
- The nomination and all accompanying documents must be submitted in English.
- The same person may nominate more than one nomination. Each application requires a separate form.
- Hyperlinks cannot be included in the online form. There is space at the end to insert URLs and/or upload any documents that might support your nomination, such as reference letters, annual reports, CVs, etc.
- Applicants will receive a confirmation email once the form is submitted.

- It is not possible to access the form or make any changes after it is submitted.
- All entries must be submitted before 30 January 2026, 17:00 (GMT).
